UNDEFEATED CAUSES.
 Deborah W. Farnham, 30, of 1001 E. 12th, formerly Brown, and for a divorce from Arthur Theophilus Brown, the grand of the action being dissolution of marriage, and for custody of the children, appeared in court today to the trial of her case. After the rise of the Williamson case, the parties lived in Lanesboro, and resided there for some time. In 1906 he had paid all $13 toward the support. His Honor said he could not see how he could do otherwise than grant the divorce. He granted the divorce and awarded the custody of the children to amend the position by adding certain issues. Mr. F. C. Pattee appeared for the defendant.

MUNRO vs. MUNRO.
 A. F. Rose appeared for the petitioner, George W. Munro, 30, of 1001 E. 12th, and for the defendant, Sophia Munro, formerly Ford, of 1001 E. 12th. The action was for a divorce and alimony with John Horner, who was the father of the children. The parties lived in March, 1903, at the Presbyterian Church. They lived at Nausauk Grange for three years. His Honor held that the parties were not married. He said that if the parties were married, he would not say that a divorce had been committed, but he would grant a divorce. He granted the divorce and awarded the custody of the children to the petitioner.

ACQUITTAL.
 Frances Withelman, a West Indian, pleaded not guilty to a charge of having on May 1, at Sydney, N. S. W., committed the crime of adultery with a man named John Horner. The jury returned a verdict of acquittal. The judge said that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the charge.

DAVIS v. DAVIS.
Royce, instructed by Mr. F. Garfield, of Coover, Gray Messrs. Perkins and Kohnen, appeared for the plaintiff. The defendant was represented by Mr. Davis, formerly Tunby. The ground for the suit was adultery with George Webb. The parties were married in 1904 at Melong, according to the rites of the Wesleyan Church. There were eight children of the marriage, four of whom were living. The plaintiff was a member of the church. There was also a former acquaintance with a neighbor named Evisness was given to the effect that the defendant was living with Webb at the time the respondent went away together to Sydney and Melbourne. When they returned to Sydney, where they lived as Mr. and Mrs. Smith, the defendant was again living with Webb. The services of the papers on the respondent, and the evidence of the plaintiff, was given to the effect that the defendant had not been proved. He would have been proved if the evidence had been in the affirmative. He found all the issues in his favor of the plaintiff.

COULCHER v. COULCHER.
Rhodes appeared for the petitioner, Philip Rhodes. The respondent was represented by Mr. C. Cleghorn, who sought a divorce from Elizabeth Margaret Coulcher, formerly Dowdell, on the ground of adultery.

was a claim for the custody of the children, and the intervention of Mr. Windsor, counsel for the father, was necessary. The case could not be dealt with at that stage. The case was married at Mr. Andrew's Church of England, on the 12th of November, 1887. In 1890 the father told petitioner she was tired of him and afterwards went away. There were three children. Petitioner was not a religious person and was not co-responsive. He saw her sometimes and asked her to return to him, but she refused. He was a doctor and a chemist, and he granted a decree nisi, returnable in six months.

NAVAL DAY.

Yesterday as part of the ceremonial welcoming of Royal visitors, was called home to our Anglo-Saxons on Naval Day. And we may think without injustice to the other capitals of Australasia in none of them was such a festival possible. It will therefore stand out in the memories of the Royal party and in those of the many thousands of our own people who witnessed it as a characteristic and a beautiful pageant. In the morning there was an inspection of Garden Island, the British naval yard and depot in these waters; in the afternoon a display of manoeuvres and a mimic attack by the boat strength of the squadron ; and in the evening an exhibition of fleet illuminations. The two demonstrations last named naturally attracted a very large attendance of the public, and all who may have seen the celebrations elsewhere must have pronounced the naval display a distinguishing feature of the Sydney visit.

Because it is exceptional in the Royal tour so far, and probably will remain exceptional throughout the Australasian tour, the essential meaning of the display is worth a moment's consideration. By virtue of her natural position, her predominant maritime interests, her long association with the Royal Navy in these waters, and the liberal provision made by past Governments of New South Wales, Sydney has become the headquarters of the fleet in Australasia. The Admiral resides here; Garden Island contains all the costly and formidable equipment of a naval arsenal; the fleet's rendezvous is here; the fleet's ships are you are here, whence our ships are despatched on their peace duties of patrol, survey, and annexation; the finest docks of the Southern Pacific are here at their service; and here is the Royal Naval House for the sailors and marines. These are all matters which serve the convenience of the Royal Navy, and assure the position which our port holds as the naval base for all Australasia. And by the partnership of these States in the Australian auxiliary squadron, we have proved that any practicable arrangement for guarding these costs in parts at our own expense is acceptable to Australians. The Commonwealth will have to deal with our joint naval as well as military concerns in future, and so much is being said in England about a better apportionment of the navy's cost that it may be expected the Federal Government will shortly undertake the renewal or the revision of the agreement. It is nearly ten years since the auxiliary squadron entered Port Jackson, and out of the total subsidy of £126,000 in 1899-1900 New South Wales paid £37,973, or more than one-fourth. Not to enter into argument on the points involved, it is sufficient to indicate the naval status of this port, so effectively brought out in yesterday's issue.
